A video surveillance system can play a key role in helping education establishments implement a zero tolerance policy to anti-social behaviour, theft and vandalism in order to create a safe and secure learning environment.

As an added benefit, a video surveillance system can be adapted for broader applications within an educational context, such as recording lessons or lectures for staff training, or used to tackle unruly behaviour in the classroom.

A major investment in a video surveillance system is not, however, something a school, college or university would wish to repeat on a regular basis and it is important therefore to specify a solution that is not just fit for today's purpose, but is also future proof in terms of its expandability.

Education

- High definition cameras to detect thieves and vandals
- The very latest recording technology to capture evidence of anti-social behaviour
- Complete weather and vandal-resistant systems to monitor car parks and play areas
- License-free software to enable remote viewing of live or recorded video
- Integrated access monitor systems to monitor movement of visitors

Education establishments have the opportunity to utilise their existing networks to considerably reduce the cost of installing a video surveillance system. There is also the additional benefit of being able to monitor video from any PC on the network, outside of normal school hours at night or during the school holidays. Live or recorded images can be viewed and managed remotely via a PC, smart phone or tablet device.

Software

Samsung Access Management Software (SAMS) is fully compatible with selected Samsung SRN series network video recorders, ensuring that high quality recorded images are always time synchronised with related access control alarm events. This important feature allows users to quickly find footage that relates to an event that may have occurred several seconds, minutes or even hours before. Users can also rewind or forward footage to before or after the actual event they wish to view.
